Course Description

Assumptions about gender and sexuality are always present in politics, even when laws and policies do not mention such identities. In this seminar, we will read feminist, gay, lesbian, queer, and transgender theory in order to bring to the surface and analyze gender and sexuality assumptions driving contemporary politics. What is gender? What is sexuality? How can law and public policy be used to address discrimination and oppression based in these identities, and their intersections with other socially salient identities such as race, class, age, and ability?

This is a writing intensive course.

Course-Specific Learning Goals

- To understand the particular features of political theory methodology, and how this methodology differs from the methodologies used in the other political science fields of American Politics, International Relations, and Comparative Politics
- To understand how and why political theorizing about gender and sexuality has developed and changed over time
- To develop critical questions pertaining to political theorizing about gender and sexuality that interest you

Career Preparation Goals

- To practice communicating effectively, both verbally and in writing
- To practice working effectively with others (teamwork)

Prior Knowledge

- Basic understanding of political theory (i.e., distinctions between and among liberalism, conservatism, and radicalism)

Required Reading

Required readings will be posted to our BB site under the “content” tab.

General Premise

The capstone seminar is a place for you, as political science student, to engage in serious, rigorous, and advanced scholarship in a way that you may not yet have had the opportunity to do in other courses. The seminar may also help you form the basis of an honors senior thesis project, although that is not required.

In this class, the onus is truly on you as an integral part of our collective learning community. I will direct and help you, but the class is about practicing research techniques, reading texts closely, learning how best to assimilate the work of others into, and alongside, your own insights. It is vital that you are aware of the audience of peers and get used to producing knowledge for the consumption of others.

COURSE POLICIES

Attendance

Strict. You should neither miss a class nor be late. Each of you has a serious responsibility to the members of this seminar. Therefore, you must arrive to class on time, and be prepared and ready to work. Students are permitted a maximum of one absence during the semester without penalty. In calculating this maximum there is no difference between an “excused” and “unexcused” absence. The allowance of one absence covers any absence, including that caused by illness, job obligations, emergencies, and any other contingencies. You should not use this absence lightly, since you may need it for one or more of the above circumstances. Any additional absence, for any reason, will negatively affect your final grade. After one absence your final grade will drop one percentage point for each absence.

Late arrivals and early departures are disruptive and unacceptable; if you anticipate being late or having to leave early on a regular basis, please make other arrangements. If you are ten minutes late, or leave class early, it will count as an absence. A student who is chronically late to class, leaves early, or is not prepared to participate in the day’s class work will not receive attendance and participation credit. Sleeping in class will count as an absence. In the unlikely event that you arrive late to class, take a seat closest to the door in order to minimize disruption.

Please refrain from leaving and returning as it disrupts the classroom atmosphere.

Class Engagement

Active course engagement and an attentive presence are essential. A seminar is not like a lecture course. You cannot hide. You must come to class prepared to present your response to the reading assignment when asked, to engage course material thoughtfully, and to share your observations and insights with your classmates. Please note that class engagement has nothing to do with class attendance; attendance is mandatory and cannot be used to improve your grade.

Class Etiquette

This class is designed to encourage discussion and exchanges of ideas in conjunction with the development of critical thinking, reading, and writing skills. I expect you to treat your fellow students with respect and courtesy, listening when they speak and refraining from personal attacks in your own statements. You may of course disagree with your fellow students, but listen attentively when they are speaking and respond in a courteous manner. Most of us have experienced how unnerving it can be to give a presentation, ask a question, or even speak up in a classroom setting. Extend to your classmates the same cordiality you would like them to extend to you.

Notes

In a seminar format it is tempting to let note-taking fall by the wayside. Resist this temptation! To help you stay on track with note taking I have posted a template on our BB site that is meant to guide your reading and help you determine what sort of information and evaluation should be included in your notes. The template, which you can download and print or fill out on your computer, is designed to make this crucial part of the course easier, so please give it a try, even if you are skeptical.

COURSE REQUIREMENTS

1. Participation (10%): See rubric. We will develop the rubric together and I will post it to BB. You will receive a mid-semester participation grade on 2/27.

2. Class Presentation (15%): Each student will take a turn in leading our seminar discussion with a short (10 minute) presentation. Instructions: Find a 1 or 2 sentence quotation from the day's assigned reading that you strongly agree with or strongly disagree with. Show us the quotation via technology or simply write it on the white board. Then use your remaining time to explicate the quotation and explain why you strongly agree/disagree with it. You may use cultural artifacts such as images, video, and/or audio to communicate your ideas. Be creative! We will develop the rubric together and I will post it to BB.

3. Quizzes (10%): There will be several impromptu quizzes given at the start of class throughout the semester. Each quiz will consist of 3 short questions from the reading assignment due that day. You are permitted to use your notes to answer these questions, but not our course readings or the Internet. The purpose of the quizzes is to reward those who complete the reading assignment, and to encourage good note taking. Each quiz will be graded as follows: 3 correct answers=100; 2 correct answers=85; 1 correct answer=70; 0 correct=50; absent=0. I will drop your lowest score when calculating your final grade. Everyone is allowed one absence or bad day.

4. Research Paper Presentation: (15%) You are required to give a 10-minute presentation of your research project during the final weeks of the semester (schedule to be determined). You are not expected to have completed the final draft of your paper by this time. But you should be in the final stages of revision and polishing. Please use the feedback from your peers and me as you put the final touches on your project. We will develop the rubric together and I will post it to BB.

5. Seminar Research Paper: (50%) The major assignment for this seminar will be a research paper of 15 pages double-spaced, 12-pt font. You are also required to submit a writing portfolio along with your final draft. Your writing portfolio will consist of the writing workshop assignments described and executed throughout the semester (details to follow). Your paper must use at least ten sources outside of our course readings, but must substantively incorporate at least one source from our course-reading list. In this paper you will bring together your close reading skills of academic articles and books. You should incorporate draft comments and critiques into a significantly revised, and polished final draft. In revising your paper, you should take seriously the comments and suggestions you receive on your work throughout the semester. The final draft should be a focused investigation of an idea, premise, or theory that you have explored through your own critical lens. It must have a focused, central thesis, and well-developed supportive and counter points throughout. It must also include a carefully constructed works cited list, with accurate in-text citations. Keep a folder of all drafts and responses: you will submit this with your final draft on 5/7. We will develop the rubric together and I will post it to BB.

Paper Format

Please use the APA style guide for documenting your sources:

Deadlines

Late assignments will not be accepted. An absence from class does not excuse a late paper. Your syllabus clearly indicates due dates so plan accordingly.

Disability Disclosure Statement

This course is open to all students who meet the academic requirements for participation. Any student who has a need for accommodation based on the impact of a disability should contact the instructor privately to discuss the specific situation as soon as possible. Please contact Disability Resources and Services at 215-204-1280 in 100 Ritter Annex to coordinate reasonable accommodations for your coursework and participation.

Statement on Academic Freedom

Freedom to teach and freedom to learn are inseparable facets of academic freedom. The university has adopted a policy on Student and Faculty Academic Rights and responsibilities (Policy # 03.70.02) which can be accessed through the following link: http://policies.temple.edu/getdoc.asp?policy_non=03.70.02

Plagiarism

This instructor and the University take plagiarism extremely seriously. Personal pride should be sufficient deterrent, but there are also severe academic penalties for academic dishonesty. Please consult the University Bulletin concerning Temple's policy on plagiarism. Any kind of plagiarism for this class will result in failure of the course. The infraction will also be reported to university authorities.

Finally

Please remember that I hold everyone accountable to these course policies. They are here to provide a framework for the class, without which we would not get much accomplished. This seminar should be a fun time, as well as a challenging period of intellectual growth, and I look forward to working with you.
